No se encontró la página A: This is happening because the HttpContext.Current is null when you are trying to write to the DB. As you can see in the Register method it is trying to read from the HttpContext.Current and to set it to a new instance of HttpContext. You should not try to write to the DB from within a static context, because the context may not be present or be created for the thread that should be writing. You are going to get this error if you are holding the WriteObject for the HttpContext.Current. public class SomeClass { public void Register(object SomeParameters) { using(SqlConnection con = new SqlConnection(...)) { //using a using statement makes sure the connection will be closed when the using is exited using(var command = new SqlCommand(...)) { //ensures that you get an error if the connection is closed while writing to the database. command.Connection = con; con.Open(); con.BeginTransaction(); //this is where the problem is happening command.Parameters.Clear(); command.CommandText = "INSERT INTO MyTable(myTableField) VALUES(@p1)"; command.Parameters.AddWithValue("@p1", SomeParameters); command.ExecuteNonQuery(); con.Commit 6d1f23a050
