resection of nasal
gliomas using the
"three-stage"
strategy. Although surgery is the treatment of choice
for most patients
with a glioma,
postoperative

neurological
deficits are not uncommon. In order to reduce the incidence of
complications, in recent years we have employed a 3-stage strategy for the management of these tumours, based on maximal safe neuro-surgical resection of the tumour in stages I and II, followed by a course of radiotherapy in stages I and II and finally, after a period of 2-3 weeks, by radiotherapy alone in stage III. In this paper we present our experience with this method, analysing the outcome in a series of 13 consecutive patients with gliomas of the

nasal cavity, from 1987 to 1995.Q:
